

I oppose the introduction of broadcast media copy controls. Content providers and broadcasters are attempting to use regulation to unreasonably constrain consumer technology, in an attempt to keep the market static despite sweeping technology changes. Without this copy control, broadcasters and content providers will be encouraged to innovate and find way to add value to the public broadcasts.